MYMOVO BRINGS NET VIDEO TO PORTABLE VIDEO PLAYERS

myMovo's powerful new free search engine and net video index enables users to easily download videos directly from top internet video providers and automatically convert them to popular Portable Video Player (PVP) formats.

Toronto, Canada - September 18, 2007 - FourSource Software introduces myMovo, a powerful new free search engine that makes the most popular internet videos available for Portable Video Players (PVPs), including cell phones, iPods[®], and a wide range of other media players. myMovo's growing net video index of over 15,000 links includes major TV network and video sharing sites in the United States and Canada, with plans to expand to internationally in 2008.

"Most people aren't using their portable devices to their full potential. It hasn't been easy to get the videos that people want onto their cell phones, iPods[®], or other mobile devices, so there hasn't been mainstream acceptance of PVP as a viable media channel. We believe that by connecting the explosion of free internet video content with the proliferation of PVPs, we can help make the PVP the next major media channel.

"We also provide a legitimate alternative to peer-to-peer (P2P) file sharing applications (such as Bit Torrent) because myMovo downloads videos directly from the provider to the user's computer. This gives the provider greater control of the content, and ultimately will create a new distribution channel" Viorel Solomon, CEO, FourSource Software myMovo is FourSource Software's first product release built on top of their Borealis search engine technology. FourSource has plans for other products based on Borealis in the future, including video podcast publishing in Q1 2008.
